PhD Eva Saar works at the University of Tartu, Faculty of Arts and Humanities, Institute of Estonian and General Linguistics.

A brief introduction to the topic:

The Finnic languages form the westernmost branch of the Uralic language family. Two lectures will introduce the development of the Finnic languages, including the differences between the Northern and Eastern Finnic languages. A special emphasis will be given on language history, individual developments and innovations of contemporary Finnic languages. The history of the Estonian language and language contacts will be discussed in more detail.
